This Love is Not for Cowards | Robert Andrew Powell

It starts with love. Pretty much everything that's good and decent in us—generosity, kindness, connection, respect, morality, openness, responsibility—is a form of love. It's almost a tautology: what is love is good; what is good is love. But love is not enough.

Love Is Not All We Need - Lion's Roar

Separated, binational couples -- some married, many not -- are fighting for their right to travel. As they argue for their right to be reunited, they deliver their message using the tag lines: "love is essential" and "love is not tourism."

Couples separated stare down travel bans with no end in ...

Love is not force. Love is not needing to be with each other every single moment to the detriment of other friendships, interests, or life experiences. Love is not smushing your two independent identities together to become one unit who is not capable of existing without the other person. Love is not uncertain about where it stands.
